Hi Josh, Chris, and Tim,

Great to catch up last week. Really appreciate you pivoting on the plan. I think it's a much clearer way forward and a better foundation to build from.

As promised, here's a step-by-step breakdown of our onboarding process, along with relevant links and attachments.

Step 1 - Sales Call

The process kicks off with a video call (currently Zoom, moving to Google Meet). We use this to get a good understanding of the business and scope the opportunity. The salesperson takes notes and, if the call goes well, follows up with an agreement. We've recently started running call transcripts through AI to help with this, which is something we'd love to automate further down the line.

Platforms Involved: Zoom (Changing to Google Meets)

Step 2 - Agreement

Client details are stored in HubSpot, and agreements are currently created via PandaDoc. The contract covers service terms, any specific conditions, and payment information, and is sent to the client for e-signature. (We're also looking at moving agreements fully into HubSpot to simplify things.) I've put together an example agreement for you, and if you sign it, it'll actually walk you through the onboarding experience from the client's perspective.

Platforms Involved: HubSpot / PandaDoc (connected via native integration)

Step 3 - Signing & Onboarding Portal (this bit will prob need a call with Steve)

Once the client signs, an automated email goes out with a link to their onboarding portal, I've linked this below, the one I showed you on the call was our old one so this is the current one which is built in GoHighLevel. They complete around 15 questions about their business, then book a kick-off call via a calendar link that drops straight into our team's calendars.

Behind the scenes, signing and completing the onboarding triggers a number of things, Steve will need to come back with more info:

- Slack notifications to the team
- A task list created in Asana
- Client info created in our central client database 'Client Status Sheet' (Google Sheet)
- An email sent from our technical manager to the client to start gathering technical requirements - different auto emails conditional to what information is needed (emails sent from GoHighLevel)
- A set of shared Google Drive folders, ready for the client to drop in any assets
- New client created in Timely
- A Google Doc populated with all the onboarding info, which becomes our central reference throughout kick-off (the salesperson adds their sales notes, and the digital specialist logs their pre-call research)
- Financial profiles created in Xero
- Payment details captured and stored in Stripe

This is a pretty crucial step!

Step 4 - Kick-Off Call

Typically 3 to 4 days after signing, we hold a 45 to 60 minute kick-off call with several members of the team. The goal is to align on offers, timelines, and budgets so we can go away and start building. After the call, the digital specialist sends a detailed written summary confirming everything discussed. This is also the point where we charge the client and their recurring payment kicks in via Stripe.

Step 5 - The Build

The team then goes away to build the full campaign over around 14 days, covering creative, ad copy, Meta ads setup, landing and checkout pages (connected to Stripe), and a backend CRM in GoHighLevel. We're currently exploring automation within GoHighLevel that could speed this up massively, which is a big goal for us.

Step 6 - Campaign Guide & Go Live

Once the campaign is built, everything is recorded and presented to the client in a Campaign Guide, along with a walkthrough video from their digital specialist. We then jump on a Go Live call to run through it, answer any questions, make any final tweaks, and get sign-off before we launch.

In the best case, the whole process from sales call to go live takes around three weeks, with the agreement-to-go-live window typically being two weeks. Our big goal is to get onboarding down to a single day, which would genuinely be a game-changer for the business.

Hope that gives you a good picture of where we're at. Lots to take in, but a great starting point. Really looking forward to the next call to go through anything that needs clarifying.

If it works for everyone, could we aim for 8:00 AM UK time for future calls?

Thanks for your patience on this fellas, speak soon.

John
